A junior trader at one of France's oldest banks, Société Générale, his stock rather suddenly declined

Indeed, there was more dough in his morning croissant than in the company coffers once he'd finished

Our mystery man's situation was more fraudulent slip than part of a grand plan

An expert knowledge of SocGen's computer set-up allowed him to manipulate its trading systems

Traders are not allowed mobile phones on the trading floor

A double espresso or two helps devious dealers burn the midnight oil
